Brides consider every detail of their big day. From the shape of the floral displays to the marinade on the chicken at the reception, you have mulled over the entire event. So what will your groom smell when he leans in for that momentous kiss?

Abinoam eau de parfums, the brainchild of self-taught perfumer Kareema McLendon, are based on historically aphrodisiacal fragrance notes, so they are perfect for driving him wild. The four scents are blended in small batches, so each bottle feels like a customized signature.

The wintry scents, Beleza and Corazon, use notes of vanilla to create sweet yet erotic stirrings. Beleza adds sandalwood and orchid, lending an innocent appeal. Corazon, on the other hand, includes pink pepper for spice. Summer scents Cobice and Desejo are fruity and full-bodied, while less subtle, they will definitely distract your new husband from the buffet table and lure him to the dance floor.

Adding to the inimitability of the fragrances is the fact that they come in glamorous bulb-spray bottles reminiscent of old Hollywood glamour. Using the bottle in your pre-aisle preparation adds romance to the occasion, elevating it to an event in and of itself.

In Los Angeles, you can find the Abinoam eau de parfums at Beauty Bar Apothecary in Beverly Hills and Escentuals in Calabasas.
